Rec centre under fire for change-room cameras

WESTSIDE

Staff says signage indicated there 'may be video surveillance'

Lucie Edwardson
Metro | Calgary

Patrons of Westside Recreation Centre (WRC) aren't happy about cameras installed in the men's fitness and aquatics change rooms — something they said they were never informed about and never should have happened.

Jeff Leroux, a five-year member of WRC and father of two, said his kids attended summer camp there and he wasn't informed about the cameras over email as a member, or while dropping his kids off for camp.

"I've been a member there for years and I never received an email saying there had been an increase in incidents and this was going to happen," he said.

Two memos (one from June and one from September) sent to WRC staff said additional signage had been posted at the facility indicating there "may be video surveillance" in the men's aquatic and fitness lockers.

The letters, written by WRC managing director Norma-Jean Hogg, said the reason for the cameras was "high incidents of theft or other criminal activity."

Hogg told Metro the change room crime began back in 2013 — which is when they first installed the cameras — and after two incidents where keys were stolen, leading to auto-theft, they decided to put the cameras in.

But, Leroux said that isn't a good answer.

"If your facility is so dangerous that you need video surveillance in the change room, then you have bigger problems that you're not informing your membership of," said Leroux.

Hogg said they do their very best, with signage at entrances and in the men's locker room.

The June letter from Hogg to WRC staff also indicated that the footage from the cameras at WRC "prepared for Calgary Police Service, was inappropriately placed on the shared drive, an accidental violation of Westside policy."

"Obviously they've shown they can't be responsible with this kind of footage," said Leroux.

They can't be responsible with this kind of footage.

Jeff Leroux

Hogg said in light of concerns brought forward it was important for staff to know that security footage is only viewed by select WRC management, and only when in the presence of police. She told Metro the footage on the shared drive was a single photo of a clothed man committing a theft, and that they've since had an IT consultant come make sure no other footage was there.

Calgary police said cameras are allowed but it must be in line with rules set out by the privacy commissioner and the facility must have visible signage that they're making a visual recording. They said police would only view the recordings if requested to due an incident criminal in nature.

Hogg said since 2013 police have been asked to view footage roughly 15 times. She encourages anyone with concerns to change in a privacy stall.

Reaction to plan for golf course fills day at council

Brodie Thomas
Metro | Calgary

Residents of Harvest Hills refuted accusations of NIMBY-ism while making passionate pleas against a development on their community's former golf course at council Monday.

Council had been warned that a busload of residents would be showing up to voice their concerns about the project and they responded by moving the item to the top of the agenda.

Cedarglen Homes is putting forward the proposal, which would transform the former golf course into a 716-unit residential development with almost 14 acres of public park space.

When the public hearing started, just over 50 people put their names on the list to address council, with each given a maximum of five minutes.

"I think we put a good plan together to council and I think we're presenting well. We're doing our jobs and doing it very well. I'd be very surprised at this point if council isn't raising eyebrows wondering what the heck is this application in front of us," said Rick Lundy, president of the Northern Hills Community

Calgary council spent the day listening to Harvest Hills residents speak against a proposed development on their former golf course. JENNIFER FRIESEN/FOR METRO Association.

The arguments against the development were numerous and far reaching. Residents didn't just raise the usual concerns of traffic, density and property.

Concerns about dangerous goods on rail lines, songbirds, wetlands, and the loss of trees were also brought up as residents made their case.

Harvest Hills resident Brent Rathgeber said it would be wrong for council to ignore community consensus in favour of a single property owner.

"This is not NIMBY-ism," he said. "We should not be vilified for caring about our backyards and the future of our community."

The biggest concern was that the area already lacks services such as schools, hospitals and recreation facilities, and that more citizens would only make the problem worse.

That was a concern councillors did not have sympathy with.

"You don't get the amenities listed here without density," said Coun. Druh Farrell.

Area Coun. Jim Stevenson

told Metro he wouldn't make up his mind on the matter until he'd heard all the residents.

He did say that if the motion to approve the development passed, he would make a motion arising to protect property owners access to park space backing onto their property.

Council had not made its vote by press deadline.

CARBON TAX

Notley pushes back

Ryan Tumilty
Metro | Edmonton

Alberta's political and industry leaders are describing Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's proposed national carbon as a pill too big to swallow — if it doesn't come with a pipeline to tide water.

"An ambitious public policy move like this, even one as worthwhile as this, needs to be built upon a fundamentally healthy economic pipeline," said Premier Rachel Notley, after Trudeau announced his plan Monday. "We need Canada to have our backs and we need to get a pipeline."

The Trudeau proposal is to introduce a national carbon tax on any Canadian province that lacks one. If passed, it would rise from $10 per tonne in 2018 to $50 per tonne by 2022 — above Alberta's current $30 target.

Calgary Mayor Naheed Nenshi, while continuing to argue cities should be exempt for any carbon tax, also commended Notley.

"Good for her. This is exactly right. Climate change has to be done in conjunction with the building of infrastructure to make sure we can get our energy to market."

Notley said her government is committed to climate change and doesn't challenge the notion of a higher tax, but that it has to come with pipelines so the industry can afford it.

Free transit service, to thank those who gave their lives to serve.

Calgary Transit is planning to give veterans free rides on Nov. 11 again this year after a successful first-time program offered in 2015.

Last year, Coun. Sean Chu's one-time motion passed, offering veterans in uniform and their families free Calgary Transit service on Canada's Remembrance Day. The initiative cost transit roughly $15,000 and was a one-time program.

On Monday, Coun. Shane Keating used his opportunity during question period to see if there's an appetite to continue the practice.

"Calgary Transit would like to extend free ridership on the entire public transit system," said transportation boss Mac Logan. "Our intention is to extend that courtesy as well this year, while it does represent a small cost to the city, I think it's one Calgarians in general would support." METRO

Deerfoot Trail not so driver-friendly: Study

TRAFFIC

Freeway often avoided due to safety concerns

Helen Pike
Metro | Calgary

If someone told you Calgarians aren't impressed with Deerfoot Trail, would you be surprised?

Between congestion and reliability a number of Calgarians don't love the skeletal road up to 170,000 vehicles use daily. But aside from road improvements, a high number of citizens choose to avoid the freeway for fears of safety.

Recent public consultation as part of the Deerfoot Trail study surveyed more than 8,000 Calgarians during online consultations and public houses to check public perception of Deerfoot.

Although a number of respondents found issues with how smoothly the freeway flows, there were a number of concerns on the road's safety.

More than 30 per cent of respondents said they choose not to use Deerfoot because they believe it's not safe. City spokeswoman Pooja Thakore said there are a number of reasons behind these concerns.

"We heard a lot about people driving too fast, following too close — a variety of things in terms of speed," said Thakore. "Even having to merge across three lanes might make people feel unsafe."

"That's obviously a big concern," said Thakore. "Part of the recommendations will be not only to address issues of congestion, but also safety."

She noted this indicates the city doesn't just have to look at adjustments like High Occupancy Toll Lanes, and other traffic improvement measures, but also turn their eyes to driver behaviour and design.

Coun. Shane Keating said he's surprised to hear people are concerned with the freeway's safety.

"They may not feel safe just because of the speed and congestion," said Keating. "I don't see it being an unsafe road."

Keating believes the trail needs to be larger, even going to four lanes in places, with a toll lane (HOT) at points to encourage carpooling and charge those for the privilege of using the extra lane.

"We have to do this smarter," said Keating. "Some off and on ramps have to be redone and some of them have to be done grade-separated so they're not conflicting with people trying to get off and on in the same half-kilometre."

In the past news outlets have crowned Deerfoot as a dangerous thoroughfare, and the City of Calgary's data notes a number of high crash intersections falling along the trail.

INFRASTRUCTURE

Council feeling road rage

Mathew Silver
For Metro | Calgary

City Council is getting antsy about the completion of the west portion of Calgary's ring road.

Coun. Richard Pootmans requested that the province reveal a timeline for the construction of the west section, as work on the Southwest Ring Road continues.

"It's important that the West Ring Road be completed at the same time as the Southwest Ring Road," he said. "Otherwise, expressway volumes and speeds of traffic will be forced into the current roadway system."

Pootmans said that the transportation infrastructure on Sarcee Trail and surrounding the arterial roads is nearing capacity. "The Southwest Ring Road dumping its traffic onto Sarcee Trail as it exists today would create a lot of serious issues from a safety point of view, and a level of congestion that would be unheard of," he said, adding they need to improve Sarcee Trail by reinforcing the overpasses and improving the intersections to accommodate drivers, or ideally get the West Ring Road.

Mac Logan, General Manager of Transportation, said he doesn't expect to get any indication of the timeline until the Spring of 2017. Logan acknowledged capacity issues on Sarcee Trail, adding officials have forecasted it will only get worse after the Southwest Ring Road opens up.

"I would suggest ... the latest possible would be starting on the project at the start of 2019," said Logan. "That would see the West Ring Road potentially opened up with the Southwest Ring Road."

The west section would close the loop, reaching 9 kilometres from 69 St. SW to Highway 1. It is by far the shortest stretch.

Residents hungry for NBA action

BASKETBALL

Game turnout suggests city could be ready for franchise

Mathew Silver
For Metro | Calgary

Could it be possible that Calgary isn't just a hockey town?

That appeared to be the case when the Toronto Raptors took on the Denver Nuggets at the Scotiabank Saddledome on Monday night.

It was a part of the NBA Canada Series, an event that showcases high-level basketball across the country and gives the league and its owners an opportunity to test the market's appetite for their product.

The lesson of Monday's contest? There was certainly an appetite.

The only question is whether that hunger is a result of a small sample size, a one-game exhibition in a city starved of big four leagues like the MLB, NBA and NFL — or whether this exhibition could make a legitimate case for NBA execs to consider Calgary. After all, there's a reason they are testing the waters here in the first place.

Fans were literally draping themselves overtop the barriers to get an autograph from Raptors' standouts DeMar DeRozan and Kyle Lowry.

It's also worth noting that there was consistent fan engagement throughout, hooting and hollering that ebbed and flowed with the action.

Some weren't optimistic

Fans taking in NBA preseason action at the Scotiabank Saddledome got up close and personal with Raptors' star Kyle Lowry. CANDACE WARD/FOR METRO

I don't think Calgary's ever going to have an official NBA team.

Nick Taub

about a future NBA franchise in the city.

"I don't think Calgary's ever going to have an official NBA team," said Nick Taub, who had the opportunity to play at half time with his bantam basketball team.

Taub said that it's been over 20 years since Calgary has hosted NBA basketball and it isn't likely to happen anytime soon — wise words from a kid barely older than 10.

Wisdom would also suggest that markets such as Vancouver and Montreal would be more viable for a product like basketball in Canada. But wisdom can't account for the rising sense of anticipation as a player cuts toward the rim.

Jeff Smith, who coaches Taub's basketball team, said that a parent almost fainted when he found out that his son would be playing at the halftime game.

"The first dad I called couldn't even speak on the phone. He had to sit down, he was so excited," said Smith.

"I don't know if they truly grasp how many people they are going to play in front of here. I don't think they've been too focused in school this past week," he said.

SAFETY

Better signs, speed bumps sought for school zones

Helen Pike
Metro | Calgary

School zones are still an area of concern for one city councillor as he looks for traffic calming and signage changes to improve safety.

Coun. Joe Magliocca said his residents, especially in Evanston, are looking for measures such as speed bumps in front of schools to help slow down drivers near crosswalks.

He's also looking for the city to use new super-reflective material for signs.

The Transportation Association of Canada approved new reflective materials as a countrywide pilot standard for signs. The city is slowly transitioning to the bright green and yellow reflective material for school zones.

Still, there's old reflective material to be used, and transportation boss Mac Logan said the transition will be slow.

"We're trying to balance that new material, particularly on our school zone signs, in a manner where we don't waste public money," said Logan.

Meanwhile, the city is careful about putting in speed bumps as many streets around schools are collector roads.

That's part of a 10-year-old traffic-calming code, but Logan said that policy is under review.

"We're updating the policy to see what's been effective, what hasn't been effective," said Logan.

He said the report will come forward shortly, along with another notice of motion to investigate what kind of traffic-calming measures work well in school zones.

Carbon plan gets mixed reception

CLIMATE CHANGE

Saskatchewan premier claims 'tax' will hurt the economy

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau has given provinces two years to come up with a plan to price carbon pollution or risk having one imposed on them by Ottawa, a move that delighted environmentalists but has ruffled some premiers.

Trudeau on Monday announced his government's plan to lay the framework for a national plan to price carbon by imposing a minimum price tag beginning in 2018.

Reaction to the proposal was swift — and mixed. Environmentalists cheered the move, saying it was one step towards meeting the commitment made by Canada and almost 200 other nations in Paris last December to cut greenhouse gas emissions.

But in Montreal, where provincial environment ministers were meeting with their federal counterpart, the ministers from Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Labrador and Saskatchewan all left early to protest Ottawa's announcement.

Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall said the new "tax" will damage his province's economy.

"In the coming weeks, Saskatchewan will investigate all options to mitigate the impact of one of the largest national tax increases in Canadian history," Wall said.

Trudeau unveiled the federal move in the Commons in a speech that kicked off debate on a Liberal motion to support ratification of the Paris climate change accord.

Yasmin Nakhuda with her monkeys Diva, a lion-tailed macaque and Caesar a Japanese macaque, in Pontypool, Ont. Activists blame a patchwork of outdated and inconsistent laws and bylaws for the rise in ownership of exotic animals. FRED THORNHILL/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Rise in exotic animal pets a concern

As the sun sets over the sprawling property in rural Ontario, the farmhouse party gets into full swing. The host walks around chatting up the guests, two small monkeys perched on her shoulder. One is dressed in a collared jumpsuit, the other in a polka-dot dress.

Up the hill, a pair of burlesque dancers perform as guests snap photographs of other animals — two miniature donkeys, a wallaroo named Wall-E, a few alpacas groomed like best-in-show poodles, two tiny marmosets, two ferrets and a skittish black-and-white fox.

This is Yasmin Nakhuda's Xanadu where she presides over her menagerie at her home in Kawartha Lakes, where she moved in 2014 after losing her "son" Darwin — a Japanese macaque that escaped from her car and wandered into an Ikea store.

Images of the tiny monkey wearing a beige shearling coat triggered a social media frenzy and a legal battle that Nakhuda eventually lost to an animal sanctuary that Darwin now calls home.

Owning exotics — wild animals taken from their natural habitat or bred in captivity and not native to the country — is a growing trend in Canada, according to animal welfare activists, who blame a patchwork of outdated and inconsistent laws and bylaws.

Rob Laidlaw of Zoocheck, a wildlife protection charity based in Toronto, has been fighting for animals' rights for decades. Reliable data on the number of exotic animals in Canada is difficult to come by, he says.

"There's a vacuum when it comes to statistics and when you're looking at actual numbers there is no central registry," Laidlaw says.

Based on his research, Laidlaw believes there are hundreds of thousands of exotic animals in the country, the vast majority being reptiles. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Student wearing hijab not allowed to take exam

A Montreal junior college is trying to determine how to accommodate a student who was prevented from taking an exam because she wouldn't temporarily remove part of her hijab, a school spokeswoman said Monday.

The young woman was asked by her male biology teacher two weeks ago to pull back part of her headscarf so he could see whether she was wearing headphones, said Line Legare with College de Maisonneuve.

"She didn't want to show him her ears," Legare said, adding the student offered her teacher the possibility of touching her through the hijab to make sure she wasn't trying to cheat.

"That made the teacher uncomfortable."

He then told the student she couldn't take the exam that day. Legare noted the teacher made it clear at the beginning of the school year he reserved the right to ensure students weren't wearing headphones before exams.

He said the teacher and the student are negotiating another date for her to write the exam. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Sexual Assault on Campus: A Metro Special Focus

Day 2: A federal vacuum

Lost without leadership

Campus sexual assault is a national problem, but no one's pursuing a national solution. With no central accountability or oversight, the provinces and schools are on their own.

Rosemary Westwood
Metro | Toronto

One of the defining elements of the fight against campus sexual assault in Canada is what it lacks: a national strategy.

To some degree, this is by constitutional design. We have no federal education minister, no federal responsibility for post-secondary education. Politically speaking, it's not a national matter.

In this vacuum, the provinces are left to negotiate a new era of sexual-assault legislation.

In Ontario and B.C., new bills passed in the last year require every post-secondary institution to have a standalone sexual-assault policy (by January and May, respectively). An opposition MLA in Manitoba has put forward a similar bill, as has the Conservative opposition in Nova Scotia. Meanwhile, Nova Scotia's ruling Liberals signed a memorandum of understanding with universities this summer tying the development of sexual-assault policies to increased funding.

In Alberta, the minister of education has directed all schools to have standalone sexual-assault policies (expected to be in place by the spring). And in other provinces — at the University of Regina, University of Saskatchewan and Memorial University in Newfoundland — schools are shouldering the initiative themselves.

But while these efforts have been greeted with hope and some praise (most notably by politicians and university administrators), critics argue the legislation doesn't go far enough.

In each province, schools are given broad autonomy over what exactly the policies should look like — a significant vote of confidence in a sector roundly viewed as having failed on the issue for decades.

None of the new or proposed legislation establishes centralized responsibility for ensuring the policies operate as they should. That's striking, since institutional accountability has been at the heart of numerous complaints about university responses to sexual assault.

Dawn Moore, a Carleton professor and the lead investigator for a major research report on campus sexual assault released this summer, was among 20 colleagues who wrote to the university's president this spring, expressing concerns the school was "embarrassing" itself by not consulting from the beginning with academics whose research deals with sexual assault. Similar complaints were registered at other schools with experts in the field.

These patchwork efforts are not the only option.

Provincial education ministers do have a national body, the Council of Ministers of Education, that co-ordinates on "pan-Canadian education initiatives." In a meeting this summer, they talked about a range of issues including indigenous education and funding, but sexual assault appeared nowhere on the agenda.

Meanwhile, the minister for the status of women, Patty Hajdu, has been tasked with developing the Federal Strategy Against Gender-based Violence, which she told me will include campus violence. But Hajdu's staff took pains to reiterate that campus sexual assault is the jurisdiction of provinces, and Hajdu said her ministry's role could only be one of

The provinces' latest efforts have been a patchwork of legislation and directives in the absence of a co-ordinated national strategy support.

"We're working very closely with the provinces, the territories, looking at how can we actually support the work that has been happening across the country and where are the gaps at a federal level that we can actually fill in," she said.

Hajdu said consultations with campus sexual-assault survivors brought up the example of the U.S., where there has been a far more aggressive national push to tackle the problem.

"There are a number of pieces of legislation and actions the president himself has taken and been very clear about. For example, making sure that campuses that he visits have strengthened policy and legislation around sexual violence and insisting that exists before he visits those campuses,"

Hajdu said.

President Barack Obama indeed makes a striking contrast to Prime Minister Justin Trudeau on the subject. While one has made an end to campus violence a pillar of his administration and tasked Vice-President Joe Biden with the file, Metro found no evidence that Trudeau has spoken publicly about campus sexual violence since winning office.

Wab Kinew, Manitoba NDP MLA and a proponent of a bill to require sexual-assault policies on campuses in that province, suggests that a public statement from Trudeau could be a useful start.

"Potentially there's room for federal intervention, but before that it would be great to see the prime minister weigh in and say consent culture is important," he said.

Any federal strategy — like Hajdu's — will take time, he noted, but a statement like that could happen "right away."

DOING 'SOMETHING,' FIXING NOTHING

Glynnis Kirchmeier is one of three women who've filed human-rights complaints against Canadian universities over the past year.

As part of her complaint against the University of British Columbia, Kirchmeier is asking the school to hire an independent person tasked with evaluating and overseeing its sexual-assault responses.

"I wouldn't have voted for it," Kirchmeier said of B.C.'s campus sexual-assault bill, which she criticized as toothless and vague.

"Why waste your time on legislation that is not very good? That's not to say I don't understand legislation has compromises, but this was so far from anything worth doing. I'm worried that people will say: 'That's that. We did something.'"

Today, I'm making a promise to you, on behalf of all ATB team members, to listen. Every time. Every place. In every way. We promise to listen.

Why listen?

Because we know banking isn't easy. And not always helpful. It's designed in a way that puts banks—not people—first.

But ATB is more than a bank. And you—and each and every Albertan—are an ATB stakeholder. And whether you bank with us or not, we're working for you.

Listening makes us smarter, but humbler. Listening means taking equal stock of your net worth and self-worth. Most importantly, listening makes banking a catalyst—not a barrier—for happiness.

Heavy rains from the outer bands of Hurricane Matthew drenched Jamaica and Haiti on Monday, flooding streets and sending many people to emergency shelters as the Category 4 storm approached the two countries. Two deaths were reported in Haiti, bringing the total for the storm to at least four.

Matthew had sustained winds of 220 kph as it moved north, up from 210 kph earlier in the day. The centre was expected to pass just east of Jamaica and near or over the southwestern tip of Haiti early Tuesday before heading to eastern Cuba, the U.S. National Hurricane Center in Miami said.

Many were taking that advice. In Jamaica, more than 700 people packed shelters in the eastern parish of St. Thomas and the Salvation Army said there were about 200 people at its shelters in Kingston.

Still, many people chose to stick it out. Local Government Minister Desmond McKenzie said all but four residents of the Port Royal area near the Kingston airport refused to board buses and evacuate.

In Haiti, authorities went door to door in the south coast cities of Les Cayes and Jeremie to make sure people were aware of the storm. At least 1,200 people were evacuated to shelters in churches and schools.

"We are continuing to mobilize teams in the south to move people away from dangerous areas," said Marie Alta Jean-Baptiste, head of Haiti's civil protection agency.

At least two fishermen died in rough water churned up by the storm, Jean-Baptiste said.

Their deaths brought the total for the storm to at least four. One man died Friday in Colombia and a 16-year-old in St. Vincent and the Grenadines on Sept. 28 when the system passed through the eastern Caribbean.

Unrest continues in Ethiopia as death toll rises from stampede

Violence flared again Monday in Ethiopia's restive Oromia region, where dozens of people were killed a day earlier in a stampede when police tried to disrupt an anti-government protest amid a massive religious festival.

The state broadcaster Monday raised the death toll to 55 from the earlier official count of 52. Its report cited a hospital official in the town where the stampede occurred, and it said three people remained hospitalized with serious injuries.

After the stampede, clashes between security forces and protesters erupted Sunday evening and continued Monday morning in the towns of Bishoftu and Ambo, an Ethiopian government official and witnesses said.

The annual Irrecha thanksgiving festival had drawn huge crowds, and the stampede occurred as people ran to escape police firing tear gas and rubber bullets and shooting live rounds into the air after anti-government protesters approached the stage where religious leaders were speaking.

People were crushed to death. A witness said some of those killed were still being recovered from ditches where they fell while trying to flee.

"Some people tried to come out en masse this morning to protest the deaths of holiday-goers on Sunday and also demand the release of people arrested during the celebrations," said Nimona Negash, a driver of a small motorized taxi.

Measures unveiled to cut housing risk

MORTGAGES

Changes close principal residence tax loophole

Ottawa has announced a number of measures aimed at curbing risk in the country's housing markets, including closing a tax loophole and tightening mortgage insurance rules to prevent borrowers from taking on too much debt.

Finance Minister Bill Morneau said Monday that the government will make changes related to the principal residence tax exemption.

The exemption allows homeowners to avoid paying capital gains tax on the sale of a home as long as they were living in it. That exemption will now be available only to Canadian residents, Morneau said, and families will only be allowed to designate one home as their primary residence.

The federal government will also beef up rules surrounding stress tests for insured mortgages to make sure that borrowers don't take on more debt than they can handle if interest rates go up or their income drops.

"Low interest rates have gradually changed the way both lenders and borrowers view debt and indebtedness in this country," Morneau said during a news conference.

"As these attitudes and behaviours have changed, some households began carrying high debt loads and pockets of risk have begun to emerge."

Starting Oct. 17, all insured mortgages will have to undergo a stress test to determine if the borrower will still be able to make his or her mortgage payments if interest rates rise.

Previously, these stress tests weren't required for fixed-rate mortgages longer than five years.

Another policy change coming into effect on Nov. 30 will require mortgage loans that the banks insure with portfolio insurance to meet eligibility criteria that previously only applied to highly leveraged insured mortgages.

The changes come as concerns mount that housing costs in Toronto and Vancouver have become increasingly unaffordable for many Canadians while foreign investors purchase homes and turn them around for a quick profit.

Many middle-class families looking to buy homes have found themselves priced out of the market, Morneau said, and in some cases that has led them to take on high levels of debt.

HOUSING

A look at changes over the years

The federal government has introduced numerous measures in recent years in efforts to stabilize housing markets. Here's a quick look at some of them:

1 Oct. 3, 2016: As of Oct. 17, all insured mortgages will have to undergo stress tests to determine whether borrowers will still be able to make their mortgage payments if interest rates rise or they lose their jobs. A tax exemption for homeowners when they sell their primary residences is limited to Canadian residents.

2 Feb. 15, 2016: The minimum down payment for new government-backed insured mortgages increases from five per cent to 10 per cent for the portion of a house price over $500,000.

3 July 9, 2012: The maximum amortization period for new government-backed insured mortgages drops to 25 years from 30 years. Ottawa lowers the maximum amount Canadians can borrow when refinancing to 80 per cent from 85 per cent and stops offering insurance on mortgages for homes worth more than $1 million.

4 April 18, 2011: Ottawa withdraws government insurance backing on lines of credit secured by homes, such as home equity lines of credit.

5 March 18, 2011: The maximum amortization period for government-backed insured mortgages is cut to 30 years from 35 years and the maximum amount Canadians can borrow in refinancing is reduced to 85 per cent from 90 per cent.

Facebook launching 'marketplace' section

Facebook says some 450 million people use its site — mainly the "Groups" feature — to buy and sell stuff locally, anything from cars to baby clothes to furniture. Now, the company is launching a separate "marketplace" section that seeks to make it easier to do this.

The last time Facebook tried its hand at such a marketplace was nine years ago, and it didn't really go anywhere.

Like Facebook itself at the time, it was a desktop computer-only product. The latest effort, of course, works on mobile devices, so it's easier to snap a photo of the item you are selling and upload it on the site.

Facebook Inc. said Monday the most popular items people currently buy and sell on the service include furniture, cars and clothes.

EMMA TEITEL ON THE ULTIMATE CIVIC HOLIDAY

More than 20 per cent of Canadians who said they didn't vote in the 2011 election abstained because they were 'too busy.' That strikes me as a big number and a big problem.

When I was in high school, running for student council, it was pretty easy to "get out the vote" on election day.

All you had to do was plug in the school's popcorn machine beside the ballot boxes and wait for the smell of hot imitation butter to reel your constituency in to the polls. A word of advice to any politician trying to increase youth-voter turnout: the key to your success is not in lofty promises of progressive change. It's in free food. And equally important: easy access to that food.

Of course I am being facetious, but there is a kernel of truth (sorry) in the popcorn anecdote. People, no matter their political affiliation, are more likely to vote when voting is made easy.

This is why nearly 300 tech employers in the United States announced this month that they will allow their staff to take off a full day's work on November 8, as a paid company holiday, to vote in the U.S. election.

Some of the tech firms who have agreed to make this accommodation include Spotify, About.com, the Wikimedia Foundation and the political data firm, ShareProgress.

Why are they doing this? The founder of ShareProgress, Jim Pugh, told the Washington Post that the participating companies

It may be hard for some of the nation's more politically informed people to accept, but there are a lot of good citizens out there.

ies hope the new policy raises voter turnout in the United States. "The more we can have this be a norm within the corporate space, the more it's going to push good civic corporate behaviour," Pugh told the Post.

According to Statistics Canada data from 2011, the No. 1 reason Canadians didn't vote in the federal election that year was because they were "not interested" in doing so.

But guess what was listed cast your ballot during your work day, and you have a handful of tasks to complete before you pick your kids up from school in the afternoon, voting becomes a luxury. I am not making this up: I know several people whose decision to vote is based on nothing more than how busy they are the very day of the election. But they wouldn't dare admit this out loud, for fear they'd be labelled stupid, apathetic and irresponsible.

But they aren't stupid, apathetic and irresponsible. They're just busy. And being busy is not a crime.

Sure, the self-righteous argument that they should know better because they live in the glorious and free utopia of Canada and "how dare they take their voting rights for granted" may hold some truth. But does this disapproving, shaming position do anything at all to increase voter turnout? No. It just makes people feel bad.

So let's do something that makes people feel good. Let's turn Election Day into a national civic holiday.

Just think about it: If you get the day off to vote, you can make an occasion out of it. You can go for lunch. You can see a movie. You can pick up your dry cleaning. And most importantly, you can take an extra few minutes or even an hour to think long and hard about who it is you'd like to vote for.

After all, what's the use of observing Canada Day, a national holiday marking the moment our democracy came into being, if we don't also grant our citizens ample time to participate in its continued existence?

Emma Teitel is a national columnist for the Toronto Star.

LINED UP OUT THE DOOR Voters wait at a polling station in Toronto on Election Day 2015. Is it fair to ask people to do this on a work day? THE CANADIAN PRESS FILE

I would take this idea one step further and argue that the more we implement this kind of policy everywhere — not merely in the United States or in the corporate world but here in Canada — voter turnout will increase dramatically.

It's true that the 2015 Canadian federal election saw the highest voter turnout in more than 20 years, but why shouldn't we aim even higher next time around? In fact, to hell with employers, why not turn the federal election into a national civic holiday?

Critics of this idea often argue that a national voting holiday wouldn't achieve much because apathy is the main reason people avoid the polls — not a lack of time. And they do have a point.

as the second most common reason for avoiding the polls?

No time.

According to the same study, 22 per cent of Canadians who said they didn't vote in the 2011 election abstained because they were "too busy." That strikes me as a big number and a big problem.

But it's not a big surprise.

It may be hard for some of the nation's more politically informed and invested people to accept, but there are a lot of good citizens out there whose decision to avoid the polls has little to do with the strength of the candidates on the ballot and everything to do with strictly practical forces such as the weather and traffic.

As tensions escalate, cars have upper hand

KLASZUS' CALGARY

Jeremy KLASZUS

There's a war on Calgary's streets, but it's not against the car, as is often claimed. Our streets have become a full-on vehicle arms race.

Worse still, this competition isn't only blessed by the auto industry, which profits by selling bigger, "safer" trucks and SUVs that better protect those inside even as they threaten those outside with greater injury.

This arms race is also implicitly sanctioned by the health system tasked with mopping up the resulting human carnage.

Given the toll in both life and money — more than $2 billion annually in Canada, according to a 2015 study — you'd think the health system would send a strong message in favour of vehicular disarmament.

Lay down your weapons. Walk. Ride a bike. Teach your kids, from an early age, to do the same.

By choosing active transportation, you can also reduce inactivity-related health problems, such as hypertension and heart disease, that are killing us and costing Canadians billions more each year.

Instead, as Metro reported last week, a health-related Alberta government website encourages parents not to bike with toddlers in tow, because little ones are "at risk for serious injury" from uneven road surfaces and — you guessed it — cars.

"If you are really set on biking with a baby or young child," the site continues, "the following suggestions can help you..."

Like all arms races, this one is a cycle of lunacy: Cars are dangerous, so it's best to transport your kid in a car. After all, what's another 2,000-kg weapon among the hundreds of thousands that are already on our streets?

Somehow, we've come to understand "child safety" as strapping a kid into a hulking machine of steel and glass (the bigger the better!) and hurtling along at speeds of 50 and 70 and 110 km/h.

Do that, and no one asks any questions. But soon as you start moving kids around in a slower, healthier way, outside of cars, you're somehow suspect.

Elsewhere, the same website (myhealth.alberta.ca) subtly warns against teaching young children to ride on a sidewalk: "Children should ride tricycles in a fenced area such as a back yard or a park."

In fairness, these are throw-away lines on a website, not official utterances from the top. The reference to tricycles, which have been mostly replaced by two-wheeled balance bikes nowadays, suggests that this is dated messaging.

Still, these admonitions are indicative of a systemic bias that is still very present.

If you think "arms race" is hyperbolic, recall that in 2013, trauma surgeons from Foothills hospital actually advocated for urban cyclists to wear body armour.

But streets shouldn't be war zones. Cities like Calgary are making streets safer for all by building dedicated bike infrastructure — separated lanes that, yes, even children can use.

Time for the health system to catch up, instead of regurgitating the follies of car culture.

RELATIONSHIPS

Breaking up over holidays can be tough for students

Sofi Papamarko
Torstar News Service

The first week of September, I overheard a conversation between some international students on U of T campus. They had all just met that day and were sharing basic information about themselves, sweetly and tentatively building new friendships.

"My boyfriend still lives in Korea," offered one of the fresh-faced freshmen. "We know it will be difficult, but we're going to stay together."

Oh, honey. Maintaining a long-distance relationship over four years isn't impossible. But it is highly implausible, especially when you're a teenager and are still figuring out who you are.

In my university experience, the students who arrived romantically attached to someone from their hometown were single again after Thanksgiving long weekend.

Known widely as "the Turkey

Pursuing new social activities (reminds students) that they are more than just someone's ex-partner and they may even find a new romantic opportunity in the process. Dr. Jesmen Mendoza

Adrienne Friesen, on breaking up with her high school boyfriend

Adrienne Friesen has done the "turkey drop," going home and breaking up over Thanksgiving holiday. CHRIS SO/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Drop" or "Dumpsgiving," it's the phenomenon of first-year university and college students, immersed in their new academic and social lives, ending things with their high school sweethearts the very next time they see them — usually Thanksgiving weekend. When the end of a relationship is dealt with in unhealthy ways, it can impede student success for a semester — or even threaten the entire school year.

Digital media specialist Adrienne Friesen, 25, is an admitted turkey dumper. When she moved to Toronto for school, she and her high school boyfriend tried to make it work. Unfortunately, the relationship lasted about as long as a slice of pumpkin pie set in front of Uncle Bill.

"I immediately fell in love with Toronto and realized that I would be staying here long-term, even beyond university," says Friesen.

And by the time U.S. Thanksgiving rolled around, Friesen says it was no longer appealing to schedule Skype calls or phone calls with her boyfriend since her time was filled with her commerce program and being on the varsity swim team.

"I was meeting tons of new people and it was much more fun to hang out with people in real life than over a screen," Friesen says.

While Friesen says her breakup was a healthy and necessary one, that's not always the case, and many students may find themselves having difficulties healing and moving on.

Dr. Jesmen Mendoza, a psychologist at Ryerson University's Centre for Student Development and Counselling, encourages students dealing with a painful breakup over Thanksgiving or at any other time of the year to get in touch with their school's counselling services and take up fulfilling activities.

"Pursuing new social activities (reminds students) that they are more than just someone's ex-partner and they may even find a new romantic opportunity in the process," Dr. Mendoza says. "Those reluctant to pursue counselling may think that they may be judged or shamed, but professional counsellors are invested in helping students becoming hopeful about their future and hopeful about having a successful intimate relationship."

Experts say that consistent exercise, a balanced diet and getting enough sleep can also help ease the physical and emotional symptoms of a breakup. But keeping busy is definitely key.

"Focus on what makes you you, which for me included refocusing on my studies, taking up a new class, getting a part-time job and getting back in touch with friends," says Friesen.

"It's important to get out and about. Even if it's just going to a café to work or study instead of staying home, it helps to be around people. Having a good friend-support system is also helpful."

And don't forget the silver lining to dumping or being dumped on Thanksgiving weekend: there has never been a more appropriate time to eat your feelings.

FASHION

Founder bids a fond farewell to Flare

Flare's visionary founder says she's sad to see the fashion publication disappear from newsstands, calling it a rare vehicle for Canadian women to see themselves reflected in a style magazine.

Donna Scott launched the glossy periodical in 1979 as Canada's answer to a proliferation of slick imports such as Glamour, Vogue and Harper's Bazaar.

At the time, professional Canadian women had nowhere to turn for a local perspective on style, design and culture, she says, noting that the women's magazine Chatelaine was more focused on homemaking and cookery.

"I'm just shocked," Scott said Friday from her home in Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ont., upon hearing the news the publication was going digital only. "It was the first ever fashion magazine for the age group we were appealing to."

Rogers Media announced Friday it was ceasing print publication of Flare as well as Sportsnet, MoneySense, and Canadian Business magazines. Beginning January 2017, they will only be available on the web and on apps, with new content posted daily.

Scott recalls being struck by inspiration while criss-crossing the country in 1975 as an in-demand speaker for International Women's Year, a United Nations designation that evolved into International Women's Day on March 8.

"I realized that women in Canada didn't have a fashion magazine and what we were doing was reading Vogue and Harper's and Glamour and Mademoiselle," said Scott, who left Flare in 1990 when Rogers took over Maclean-Hunter. "And they were all great but they didn't have our stores or our prices or our colleges or any of the information that would be for Canadian women."

Scott, now in her 80s, decided to start a magazine that would feature Canadian retailers and designers.

"We were looking at the intelligent young woman who had great hopes when she finished her education to get a career or a job and do well in life," said Scott. "Like men did at that time." THE CANADIAN PRESS

McKinnon's Clinton is the one to watch

THE MOMENT: The Clinton-Trump debate

Hillary Clinton (Kate McKinnon) squares off against Donald Trump (Alec Baldwin) on the debate stage.

"He spent his life cheating labourers," Clinton says. "Labourers like my own human father, who made drapes or sold drapes, something with drapes, and he was relatable and I am also relatable."

Later, in her closing statement, she says, "Listen, America, I get it: you hate me. You hate my voice and you hate my face. Well, here's a tip: if you never want to see my face again, elect me president, and I will lock myself in the Oval Office and not come out for four years. But if you don't elect me, I will continue to run for president until the day I die."

Rejoicing abounded when SNL announced that Baldwin will play Trump until the election and rightly so: the actor perfectly captures the candidate's jutting lips, bullying cadences and the way he plays to his countrymen's worst instincts. (When I interviewed him this past spring, he called Trump "America's bile duct.")

As great as Baldwin is, though, I don't need a Trump parody. Trump takes care of that himself. McKinnon's performance is more relevant.

By pointing out both Clinton's awkwardness ("my human father"), and the inherent sexism she faces from men and women ("you hate my face"), McKinnon gives us valuable insight into why America can't warm to Clinton. Her impression goes beyond mockery to get to uncomfortable truths.

In this election (and its SNL funhouse mirror), he's getting all the ink. But the story is her.

Kim Kardashian shaken but unharmed in robbery

INVESTIGATION

Five assailants stole $10M in jewellery at gunpoint

Armed robbers forced their way into a private Paris residence where Kim Kardashian West was staying, tied her up and locked her in a bathroom before making off with more than $10 million worth of jewelry, police officials said Monday.

A spokeswoman for Kardashian West said the reality TV star, who was in Paris attending fashion week shows, was badly shaken but physically unharmed.

She left Paris Monday morning a few hours after the incident, and flew to Teterboro Airport in New Jersey. From there she travelled in a motorcade to her apartment building in downtown Manhattan, where there was a heavy security presence.

Friends of Kardashian West consoled the reality TV star in New York City following her ordeal.

LaLa Anthony, wife of basketball player Carmelo Anthony arrived Monday afternoon, as did family friends Jonathan Cheban and Simon Huck, who are often featured on Keeping Up With the Kardashians.

Kris Jenner indicated her daughter was doing OK, giving a "thumbs up" signal when a reporter asked how Kardashian West was faring. Video cameras lined barricades outside the building, capturing security guards milling about.

Paris police are hunting for five suspected assailants after the incident, which has raised new concerns about security in a ring worth 4 million euros ($4.5 million). In a message to The Associated Press, the Paris prosecutor's office said that only two of the five suspects forced their way into the apartment.

Kardashian's stylist was also in the residence at the time, and alerted police, but Kardashian's bodyguard was not present according to the prosecutor's office.

It's unclear whether the couple's two children, 3-year-old daughter North and 10-month-old son Saint, were with Kardashian West when the robbery happened, or if they were with her at all on her trip to France.

Police said the actress' family was placed under police protection at the George V hotel after the incident. Her sister Kendall Jenner appeared with Kardashian at Paris fashion shows in recent days and often appears on the catwalk herself.

Kardashian's husband, Kanye West, abruptly ended his performance at the Meadows Music and Arts Festival in New York on Sunday night.

"I'm sorry, family emergency, I have to stop the show," West told the audience.

Kardashian West has the habit of showing her jewels and whereabouts in her social media, including in recent days when she posted pictures of her attending fashion week shows. A few days ago, she also flashed a big ring on Twitter and Instagram.

Kardashian West was ambushed last week by a serial celebrity assaulter who attempted to grab her as she was entering a restaurant. She was also attacked outside of a Paris fashion week show in 2014. She wasn't hurt in either incident.

Murray oozes confidence

NBA

Canadian rookie was the 7th pick in June's draft

He carries with him a confidence that borders on brashness, a feeling that he will thrive and not just survive as a raw NBA rookie, a kid with one year of college basketball under his belt who feels ready to make his mark.

It is impossible to know just how Jamal Murray will fare in his rookie season with the Denver Nuggets but know this: he thinks he'll be just fine.

"That's one thing I have always had, I've always had confidence," Murray said before he made his exhibition season debut with the Nuggets against the Toronto Raptors in Calgary Monday night. "I know what I can do. I don't think there's anyone that can stop me on the court. That's just a basketball player, that's the way you gotta think. That's the way I feel."

Murray, the seventh pick in last June's draft after a year at Kentucky, is being force-fed one of the hardest positions in the NBA to learn — point guard — while spending some time at shooting guard as well. Denver coach Michael Malone knows it's a lot for a 19-year-old to digest, but the Nuggets are willing to be patient.

Make no mistake about it, Murray knows he's good.

"Some plays you get mixed up, but once you go through it once or twice, it's fine," Murray said. "I know the plays though, I know them well. I just got to make sure I know which play to run."

"It's part of being a point guard and a combo guard. You have to be able to play both positions well and know where everyone is going to be."

Murray was labelled a surefire NBA hit by his college coach

Murray, a native of Kitchener, Ont., averaged 20 points per game in his only season at Kentucky.

right after he was drafted when Kentucky's John Calipari assured anyone who'd listen that Murray will be the highest-scoring rookie in the league this year.

It put a bit of a target on Murray but he won't shy away from it. It's not his style.

"I know I can score," he said. "Everyone knows I can score. Coach Cal has seen what I can do. I know I'm one of the best scorers in the league already and I'm one of the best rookies here but no, no pressure."

Stroman tasked with neutralizing O's big bats

The Toronto Blue Jays and Baltimore Orioles are about as similar as two clubs can be entering the American League wild-card game.

Both teams had 89-73 records in the East Division standings. Both teams clinched playoff spots on the final weekend of the season. And both teams own power-heavy lineups that can feast at a homer-happy stadium like Rogers Centre.

The Blue Jays had a 10-9 edge in the season series but Baltimore took two of three games last week in Toronto.

Baltimore led the major leagues with 253 home runs over the regular season.

So who will blink first on Tuesday night?

The Toronto pitching staff led the American League in earned-run average while the Orioles led the major leagues in home runs.

Chris Tillman will get the starting assignment for Baltimore while fellow right-hander Marcus Stroman will be on the hill for Toronto.

"Some guys rise to the occasion. I've seen Stro do that many, many times," Blue Jays manager John Gibbons said Monday. "I think he's the perfect guy."

The winner of the one-game showdown will advance to the American League Division Series. The Texas Rangers will host Game 1 of that series on Thursday. THE CANADIAN PRESS

IN BRIEF

Kubiak says Siemian is Denver's QB if he's healthy

Gary Kubiak always had a definitive answer last season when he gathered his players to let them know whether Peyton Manning or Brock Osweiler would start that week. This time, it comes with a caveat.

Kubiak said during one of his weekly radio show appearances Monday "our plan is for Trevor (Siemian) being there Sunday, but we have to take it day by day."

So, rookie Paxton Lynch could get his first start, over the ailing Siemian (non-throwing shoulder), when the Broncos (4-0) host the Atlanta Falcons (3-1). THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Panthers coach uncertain if Newton will play Monday

Panthers coach Ron Rivera says Cam Newton's status for next Monday night's game against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers is uncertain.

Rivera says the reigning league MVP met with doctors Monday, but offered no update on the quarterback's progress after he was knocked out of Sunday's 48-33 loss to the Atlanta Falcons with a concussion.
